Call Summary:

- DME walked through slide deck
- Explained that the snapshot of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg report is instructive for format, grain size
- Does the group believe this is the right direction?
  - General agreement on direction, with some questions and comments.
- Comment: the Task Force spent a lot of time working through the details of the mid-year mobility recommendations; will this new, larger grain size approach work?
- Comment: can we build in safeguards to ensure that there are “feedback loops” during implementation, so that we know how implementation is progressing and whether there are tweaks required?
- Comment: agree with the approach because the Task Force should spend more time on “big thinking” and less on implementation details.
- Comment: going forward, how will the Task Force gather community input?
- Comment: can we make the connection between the Task Force’s work and equity more explicit?
- Comment: the snapshot looks good; it represents a realistic approach to formulating big, bold recommendations.
